

New international students introduced to life in Education City

Education City hosted an orientation for the newly admitted international students from 4-9 August. There were 99 students representing 27 countries from all over the world. The orientation was organized by current students at Education City and aimed to expose the new comers to life in Education City and introduce them to Qatari culture.

Overall, there has been a positive reaction from the new students and they've expressed their excitement about becoming part of Education City's community. A freshman from Korea attending Weill Cornell's pre-medical program commented "I recommend to all the girls who were in my place hesitant to study abroad alone to just go for it!"

Students also participated in a cooking competition and a photography contest, where they demonstrated their talents to each other.

Some of the new students conveyed their appreciation to Qatar Foundation for providing an excellent education opportunity. A Georgetown freshman from Macedonia stated: "I would like to thank Qatar Foundation and Georgetown for selecting me and assisting me with financial aid, I really see the country's rapid development."
